As the sun rises, we find ourselves in the northern region of Komodo National Park, eagerly anticipating the day's diving activities. Our schedule includes two dives in the northern part of the park and another two in the southern area. The northern region of Komodo National Park is renowned for its crystal-clear waters, maintaining a pleasant temperature ranging between 25°C to 27°C. This ideal environment allows corals to flourish, benefiting from the vigorous currents that flow through the channel connecting the Flores Sea and the Indian Ocean. Scattered throughout the channel, you'll discover small islands and picturesque white sandy beaches, creating a scenic backdrop with the dramatic presence of Komodo National Park to the west and Flores to the east, heightening the thrill of our adventure.

In the north, a variety of dive experiences awaits. You'll have the opportunity to engage in exhilarating drift dives, explore sandy bottom macro sites, encounter majestic pinnacles, and perhaps even catch a glimpse of the occasional graceful Manta ray. As we venture further south, nearing the Indian Ocean, the water temperature gradually cools to approximately 18°C to 25°C. The drop in temperature fosters a thriving breeding ground for plankton, resulting in the water taking on a greener hue and becoming densely populated with marine life. Although visibility may decrease, this presents a unique opportunity for divers to focus their attention on the intricate details of the reef itself, rather than wide-angle landscapes. Prepare to be captivated by a plethora of intriguing macro marine species.

Lembeh Strait: A Diver's Paradise

Lembeh Strait is one of the world's most renowned dive destinations, a must-visit for any diver in Indonesia. Famous for its incredible diversity of critters, many species—such as the Hairy Octopus and Lembeh Sea Dragon—are found only in this local area.

Divers can enjoy mild currents, minimal surge, and shallow dive sites, making it an ideal location for all experience levels, from beginners to seasoned photographers. Water temperatures vary throughout the year, with the coolest months being July and August when temperatures drop to around 25°-26°C (79°-81°F). For your comfort, we recommend bringing a 3mm wetsuit with a vest or a 5mm wetsuit, especially if you plan to dive frequently. Additional layers are available for rent if you find you need more warmth.

While macro photography and critters are our primary focus, we also venture outside the strait to explore beautiful wide-angle opportunities. Divers will encounter breathtaking coral gardens, towering sea fans, and expansive seascapes perfect for wide-angle shots. Visibility is occasionally excellent, reaching up to 40 meters on the East of Lembeh. Inside the strait, average visibility is around 10 meters, but for our purposes, visibility is rarely a concern.
