In order to prioritise safety, make sure you are adequately rested and hydrated prior to your initial dive as well as for subsequent dives.

We recognise that although you have learned about safety during your scuba course/s, the excitement and anticipation of a diving holiday can sometimes cause us to neglect our own readiness for a dive.

Our crew's safety is also important, so we limit the number of dives to four per day, including a night dive, to minimise fatigue and reduce the risk of accidents.

Itineraries are subject to change due to weather and logistics, but our cruise directors will keep you informed.

The Diving

You can enjoy a Komodo diving cruise throughout the year, thanks to the delightful tropical climate and the efficient management team that ensures the dive sites' quality. The Dry season spans from April to November, with the busiest period being from April to August. This season offers the most favourable weather conditions, characterised by calm seas and minimal rainfall. On the other hand, the Rainy season occurs from November to March, bringing slightly stronger winds and the majority of the annual rainfall. The water temperatures in Komodo National Park vary depending on the location. The northern areas boast warmer waters, reaching a high of 82 Fahrenheit (28°C), while the southern regions can have temperatures as low as 68 Fahrenheit (20°C). Manta rays can be observed throughout the year.

The period between November and March provides excellent visibility, exceeding an impressive 100 feet (30 meters). However, during July and August, visibility decreases as deep currents bring abundant nutrients to the reefs, making them more vibrant and active.

Scuba Diving

For scuba diving in Komodo, it is advisable to possess an intermediate or advanced certification. The challenging currents and unpredictable tides can be daunting for individuals with limited diving experience.
